Literary genres are often defined by the cultural expectations and needs of a particular historical and, cultural moment or place.

The major literary genres defined by a topic are:

Classic - fiction that has become part of an accepted literary canon, widely taught in schools

Detective - fiction about a crime, how the criminal gets caught and serve time, and the repercussions of the crime

Fantasy - fiction in an unreal setting that often includes magic, magical creatures, or the supernatural

Memoir - factual story that focuses on a significant relationship between the writer and a person, place, or object; reads like a short novel

Mystery - fiction dealing with the solution of a crime or the revealing of secrets

Romance - genre which focuses on the relationship and romantic love between two people, and must have an "emotionally satisfying and optimistic ending"

Science fiction - story based on the impact of actual, imagined, or potential science, often set in the future or on other planets

Western - fiction set in the American Old West frontier and typically in the late nineteenth to early twentieth century waterway. The trees had been stripped by a recent wind of their white covering of frost, and ominous, in the fading light. A vast silence reigned over the land. The land itself was a cold that the spirit of it was not even that of sadness. There was a hint in it of laughter, but of that was mirthless as the smile of the sphinx, a laughter cold as the frost and partaking of incommunicable wisdom of eternity laughing at the futility of life and the effort of life. It was . But there WAS life, abroad in the land and defiant. Down the frozen waterway toiled a frost. Their breath froze in the air as it left their mouths, spouting forth in spumes of vapour into crystals of frost. Leather harness was on the dogs, and leather traces attached them to without runners. It was made of stout birch-bark, and its full surface rested on the snow. The front end of the sled was turned up, like a scroll, in order to force down and under the bore of soft snow that surged like a wave before it. On the sled, securely lashed, was a long and narrow oblong box. There were other things on the sled-blankets, an axe, and a coffee-pot and frying-pan; but prominent, occupying most of the space, was the long and narrow oblong box.

He did not need a compass to tell him where southwest was. He only needed the feel of the trade wind and the drawing of the sail. I better put a small line out with a spoon on it and try and get something to eat and drink for the moisture. But he could not find a spoon and his sardines were rotten. So he hooked a patch of yellow Gulf weed with the gaff as they passed and shook it so that the small shrimps that were in it fell onto the planking of the skiff. There were more than a dozen of them and they jumped and kicked like sand fleas. The old man pinched their heads off with his thumb and forefinger and ate them chewing up the shells and the tails. They were very tiny but he knew they were nourishing and they tasted good.

"White Fang" (Jack London)

Dark spruce forest frowned on either side the frozen waterway. The trees had been stripped by a recent wind of their white covering of frost, and they seemed to lean towards each other, black and ominous, in the fading light. A vast silence reigned over the land. The land itself was a desolation, lifeless, without movement, so lone and cold that the spirit of it was not even that of sadness. There was a hint in it of laughter, but of a laughter more terrible than any sadness—a laughter that was mirthless as the smile of the sphinx, a the grimness of infallibility. It was the masterful and incommunicable wisdom of eternity laughing at the Wild, the savage, frozen- hearted Northland Wild. But there WAS life, abroad in the land and def string of wolfish dogs. Their bristly fur was rimed with frost. Their breath froze in the air as it left their that settled upon the hair of their bodies and formed into crystals of frost. Leather harness was on t a sled which dragged along behind. The sled was without runners. It was made of stout birch-bark, and its full surface rested on the snow. The front end of the sled was turned up, like a scroll, in order to force down and under the bore of soft snow that surged like a wave before it.
